New Study of Sun Spots Detailed in Publication

Popular conjecture as to the importance of sun spots to inhabitants of the earth is just so much wild guessing until scientists learn more about sun spots themselves. Among other astronomical matters with widespread study of sun spots is being carried on in the University of Michigan observatory at Ann Arbor. Discoveries of the last few years have made possible the prediction of latitudes of sun spot activity throughout an 11-year cycle. This fact, together with evidence that regions of maximum and minimum sun-spot activity recur with each 27-day rotation of the sun about its axis, led Michigan astronomers to believe that further studies might reveal the basis for predicting the longitude of sun-spot activity as well as its latitude.

After three years of intensive study of the problem, Dr. Hazel Marie Losh, of the Michigan observatories, has published the results of her observation of the distribution of sun spots in longitude, indicating strong evidence for the belief that sun spots follow regular patterns in their distribution across the face of the sun, as well as they do in distribution up and down between the solar poles. Most striking among Dr. Losh's findings is the tendency for opposite sun-spots activity to appear in the northern and southern hemisphere at the same sun or any one longitude. While occasionally similar activity areas appear in the same longitude in both hemispheres, by far the most common situation was the finding of maximum activity in the northern hemisphere, accompanied by minimum activity in the southern hemisphere.

FATHER DARLEAF'S COLUMN
by c. h. r.

If Dr. Clyde O'Brien has a hobby, it is shooting RATS with a rifle! He isn't waiting for the anti-rat campaign in Appomattox to open up on the rodents. So far this week he has shot and killed FIVE rats, taking up his position on the porch outside his upstairs office.

The prowess of Ivanhoe Bryant as a player on the Appomattox high school football is becoming recognized.. but, this is about Ivanhoe's older brother. He had a spotless white cat with blue eyes. This cat was his pride and joy.. except, that he also wanted a perfectly black cat to go along with the white one. And last week, according to Mrs. Bryant, he found just the cat: perfectly black, down to the 1st black c es. So, all he needs now is a pair of names, for I understand he hasn't named them yet.

Notice the beautiful hues of the trees during October. I always have considered October the most beautiful month of the year. Take a drive and survey the wonders of nature.

BUT.. drive carefully. I cannot trust myself to write concerning the driver who attempts to pass another car when approaching a curve or a hill crest. Coming from Lynchburg recently I was driven clear off the highway by a speed demon, who dashed around a car on a curve right in my face! There is no feeling worse than to see two speeding cars running abreast and coming your way. In the situation referred to above, 14 people would probably have been killed in three cars but for the fact that I managed to get clear off the road. So what gives the right to risk the lives of others that way. We condemn Hitler and other dictators for risking the lives of innocent people, and justly do we condemn them, but their are "Highway Hitlers" in our country placing innocent lives in the laps of the gods.. I would like to see the old-fashioned stocks revived for public exhibition of reckless automobile drivers.. On maybe the island in the spout spool. Wonder we would happen were some town, say Appomattox to pass a law reviving the ducking stool and the ducking of drivers to try to pass another car on curve or going over the crest of a hill!

Between two evils, choose neither; Between two goods, choose both!

The ladies night banquet of the Appomattox Lions Club is scheduled for October 26. For the "fun" item on the program, I herewith suggest a "husband-calling" contest! That's sure-fire biz! The ladies get off at a distance and open up their lungs and call the men-folks!

Note: another rifle shot outside the window doubtless means that Dr. O'Brien has bumped off another rat. I hope, I hope, I hope!

From the Christian Science Monitor: "The swiftly striding years have witnessed the passing of yet another American institution. That forum of friendliness, the town pump, has largely vanished from the scene. Mere mention may recall to those who have spent their growing days in the small communities, long-past rivers of recollection. The town pump, in a day not so long gone, was far from being simply a source of water. Its worn handle and freshened spout were the center of the village, a deep-shafted axis around which the community revolved. It yielded not only liquid, but mental refreshment, for those who came to draw water would relay to others the happiness of their little world. Here, often machinery would be set in motion to alleviate temporary distress, to aid an incapacitated neighbor with his affairs. Today, although the town, pump is no longer available to the eye, it still thrives mightily underground, for it has given way to a municipal "waterworks," and its metal roots leading to hundreds of homes. Telephones, subsidized newspapers, and news broadcasts have made unnecessary daily visits to this "fountain of knowledge," but friendships formed at the town pump after remain close to cement the foundations of many a city."

Come to think of it, it might be cheaper to hire Dr O'Brien to kill off all the rats in otwn than to buy Red Squill.

Autumn scene: the flowers fading like our hopes, the leaves falling like our years, the clouds fleeting like our illusions, the light diminishing like our intelligence, the sun growing colder like our affections, the rivers becoming frozen like our lives— all bear secret relations to our destinies. Bright Tobacco Bringing 15c Price Average

Sales on the auction floors of Virginia's eleven Old Belt tobacco markets yesterday brought an estimated average price of 14.5 cents a pound, as bright tobacco continued to pile up in warehouses for large sales.

Several markets reported a slight price improvement from Tuesday's quotations, but attributed this to a better grade of offerings.

An estimated 580,000 pounds of tobacco was sold yesterday at South Boston for an average of 15 cents. Tuesday this market sold 612,248 pounds at an average of 14.88.

The market at Danville was pressed to capacity. It is estimated that one and a half million pounds were auctioned there Tuesday's average price at Danville was 15.35.

The Clarksville market reported the sale of approximately 190,000 pounds of leaf at 14.5.

Sale of 200,000 pounds was reported from Chase City, with good grades bringing higher prices than on Tuesday's 15 cent average.

Inferior grades pulled the average at Kenbridge to 13.9 cents.

The bright tobacco market at Petersburg reported 158,358 pounds sold yesterday at an average price of 14.1. This was above the opening day.

Sales at Rocky Mount amounted to 210,146 pounds at about 14.5. At Lawrenceville the average was down to about 12 cents.

Brookneal is reported to have sold 150,000 pounds yesterday, with the price running about 15 cents.

Farmers were generally pleased with the trend of sales.

Anti-Rat Campaign Meets With Favor

Fox Hunting Popular Sport

The annual hunts of the Piedmont Fox Hunters' Association are being held this week out of Lynchburg. A number of members of this famous hunt group from Appomattox are participating in the events on the program.

Fox hunting is an ancient and honorable sport in this section, with scores of devotees. On Friday night September 29, beginning at seven o'clock and ending at three o'clock Saturday morning, one of the longest hunts of the season was held in this county, with about 30 people participating, ending with the catch and kill of a big grey fox which was so smart the hunters thought he was a red fox until the dogs caught him. The big fox set a fast pace for 25 miles over hills and across valleys, from Appomattox to a few miles east of Elan.

Both the fox and the hounds were completely exhausted when the catch was made.

Impromptu hunts are popular in this section, perhaps preferred to the formality of the big annual association meets.

Miss Gills Gets Literary Honor

Mary Louise Gills, of Appomattox, was awarded two prizes at the recent U. D. C. convention in Richmond. One was for the best historical play, the title being, "History Repeats Itself for Jimmy;" and the other prize was for the best essay on "The Life of Jefferson Davis After the War."

Miss Gills had a poem in the last issue of the Westminister Magazine, which received favorable mention in the press, and her work will be represented in the Poetry Digest, published in Times Square, New York. Her work by June will appear in the "Library of Important Poems."

She has won twenty-two prizes for historical plays, essays and a short story.

Highly pleased with the interest shown, thus far in its proposed Anti-Rat Campaign in Appomattox, the local Ruritan Club is proceeding with plans for the event. The first week in November has been designated as Anti-Rat Week in Appomattox.

This week 250 letters were mailed to residents of the town, explaining the campaign, and the use of Red Squill— which will be used to kill the rats. Post cards were enclosed with the letters for residents to send in signifying their interest in cooperating.

The Ruritan Club released today the following statement on Rats:

"When Uncle Sam's census takers go forth to count noses every 10 years, they don't inquire of any householder as to how many rats inhabit his premises. Thus we can't prove it when we say there are 2,500,000 rats in Virginia.

"But that figure is based on estimates of the United States Public Health Service which claims that the rat population of the nation is slightly in excess of the human population. And Public Health Service officials ought to have a pretty good idea of the rat situation, considering the fact that they have been fighting the pests for years.

"Other rat authorities shake their heads when they look at the health service's estimate. The estimate, these authorities say, is too conservative. A few years ago a man from Atlanta, who claimed to be the champion rat killer of the country, declared in an interview in Richmond that no doubt Virginia's capital city has two rats to every human. The champion said he had killed or had assisted in the killing of 15,000,000 rats.

There Are Too Many

"But whether there are 2,000,000 or 5,000,000 rats in Virginia, there's one point on which all health authorities agree. There are too many. All medical men know there are enough rats in Virginia to constitute a serious health menace, a fact which many laymen do not realize.

"For example, the rat is the chief reservoir a n d source of plague among humans. Many other rodents are susceptible to plague infection, but it is the rat, just like the one you saw playing around in the alley last night, which spreads the disease to man.

"Far more prevalent than plague is infectious jaundice, another disease spread by rats. Information on that disease should be of special interest to Virginians since State Health Department officials have reported that there is as apparent increase in the number of cases here this year in the Old Dominion.

"Typhus fever is a third disease which Mr. Rat can claim to have a big hand in spreading. Actually, it is not the rat himself but the flea which lives on the rat's body which carries the germ.

"What rats cost the people of Virginia each year in suffering, both physically and financially, cannot possibly be estimated But if you don't think the cost is high, ask State Health Department officials or your own family physician. They know what a real menace the rat is."
